

Greek Foreign Minister to UN

The foreign minister will now represent the Greek premier in some of the latter's scheduled meetings, along with his participation in special sessions within the framework of the 66th UN General Assembly. (<http://www.athensnews.gr/portal/10/47585>)

Apparently Erdogan and Netanyahu are still going to the UN. They have other agendas besides the gas drilling problem to work on.

Analysis. This makes sense if you want your prime minister in country to make the war/no war decision. The foreign minister will be in the perfect place to negotiate with Turkey and Israel a solution to the problem.

There is no solution to the problem save a change in status for Turkish Cyprus. Either Turkish Cyprus must be recognized as an independent state like Greek Cyprus or the two parts must form some kind of union. Neither is likely to happen in the next 48 hours.
